each day – each night

harp, double bass

eva-maria houben

© edition wandelweiser 2010 catalogue number ew16.147

each day – each night

duo: harp & double bass

eva-maria houben

2010

for rhodri and dominic.

there are quotations and allusions:

anton webern, fünf stücke für orchester op. 10

béla bartók, musik für saiteninstrumente, schlagzeug und celesta

each day – each night

each day
a new colour
another landscape
another motion
a new light

awakening my ear to listen to things passing by

eva-maria houben

each night
another dream
another darkness and
another loss

acuteness of senses: nothing else to do

eva-maria houben

brackets: sounds are connected (tempo).

1. v. : laissez vibrer; the bass-string is touched with the bow (or set in motion by 'pizz.'), and vibrates until the sound has vanished.

: a sound of a very long duration. the bow of the double bass changes nearly inaudibly.

o (double bass): a very soft and weak sound; a sound of a very short duration, but with recognizable pitch.

s. p. : sul ponticello, on the bridge; here: muting the strings with the other hand.

a four-string bass plays the b (p. II) one octave higher.

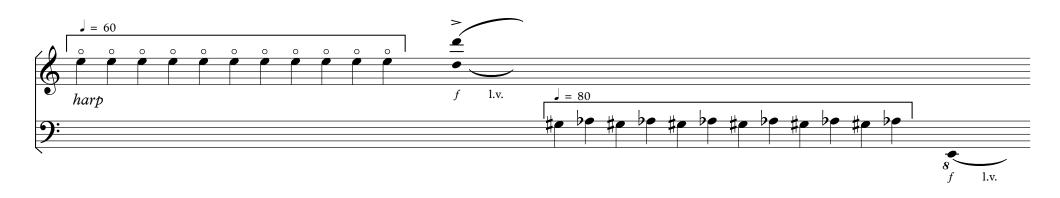

harp and double bass playing together:

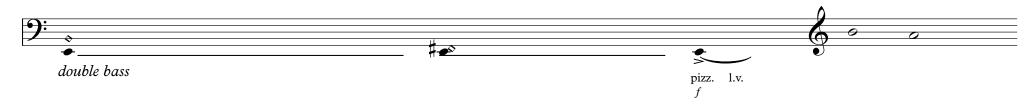

one performer starts—and the other performer follows anytime.

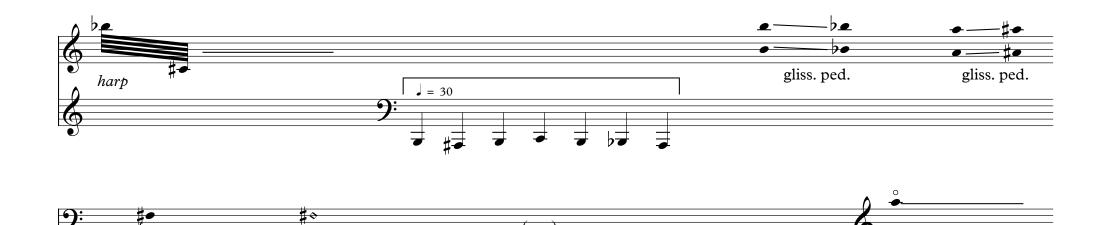

free (shorter or longer) silences between one event and the following one.

each day

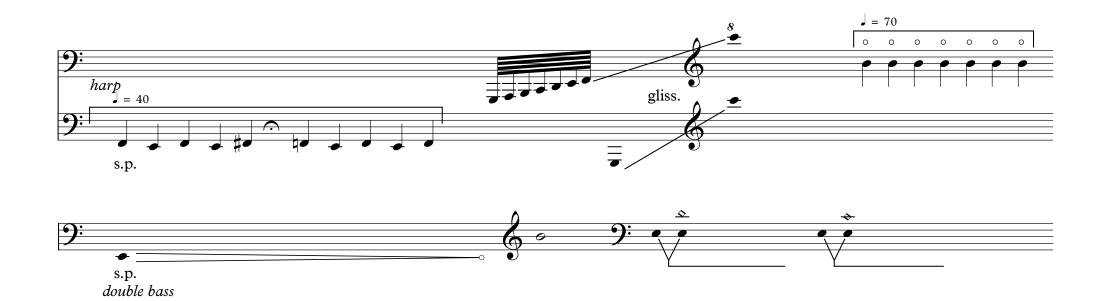

I

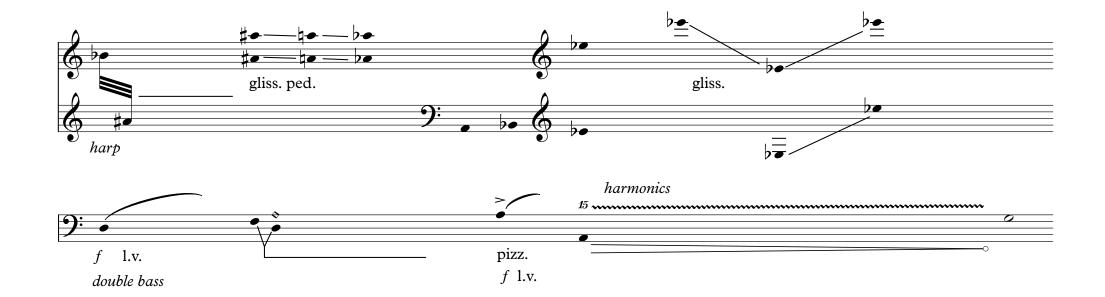

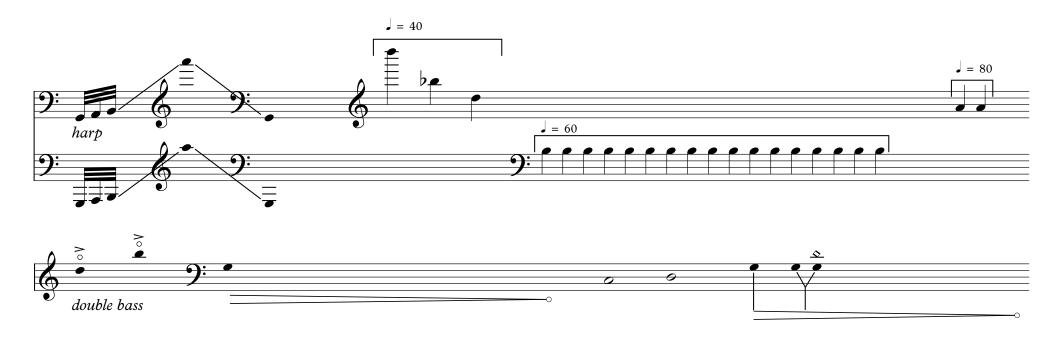

double bass

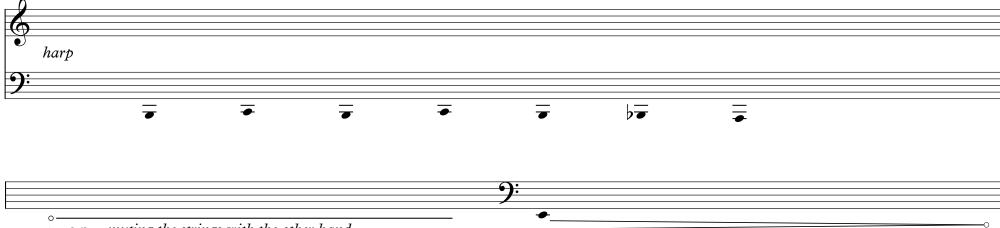

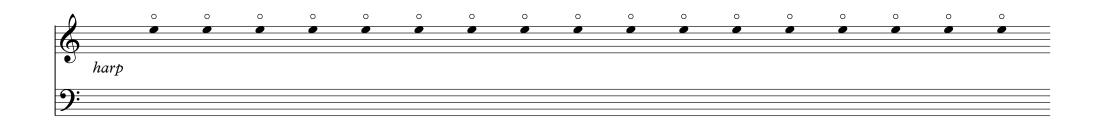

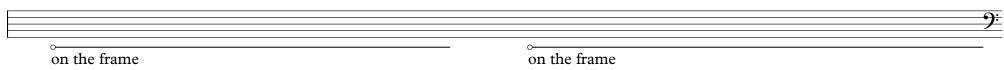

each night

I

s.p. muting the strings with the other hand double bass

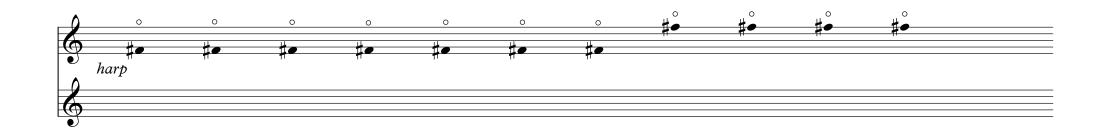

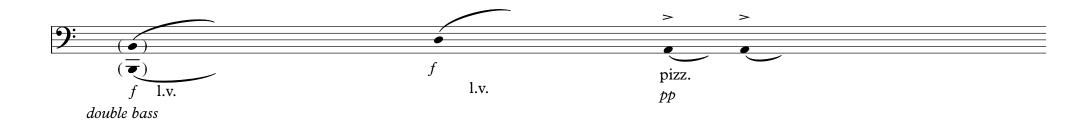

double bass

IV

V

